

MORE FROM THE HOMEPAGE

Champion surfer fights off shark during competition

She meant what she said. Minneapolis really is nice.

Sanders' supporters in Minnesota hope he carries torch

Spieth, amateur history at St. Louis

TRAVEL

Skip lines in Rome with The Omnia & Roma Pass

The Omnia & Roma Pass promises access to the city's top attractions – without the lines.

By Anne Z. Cooke Tribune News Service | JULY 17, 2015 — 7:02AM

TNS

The Roman Forum is among the many attractions you gain access to with the Omnia Pass.

The Roman Empire may be history, but Rome is still the eternal city, a larger-than-life destination on every traveler's wish list. Will the Omnia & Roma Pass, the city card that fast-tracks pass-holders through the experience, make a difference?

A better question is whether Rome can cope with the 5 million travelers that visit the city annually. Sightseers, retirees on holiday, historians, pilgrims, nuns in habits, schoolkids in matching shirts and eager fans weaned on the movies — everyone's there to see where it all began.

That means jostling crowds, straggling groups and massive lines. But flash your Omnia & Roma Pass and you're through the gate and into the Coliseum, where gladiators really did bludgeon each other to death. Or into the Vatican rooms, once palatial living quarters, where Renaissance popes plotted to poison their rivals. Or to the Sistine Chapel to see Michelangelo's frescoes. Or the Roman Forum and St. Peter's Basilica.

Related Coverage

Details: The Omnia & Roma Pass

Jul. 17

Most Read

- 1 3 Doors Down frontman stops band's concert, kicks out man who hit woman • MUSIC
- 2 Eaux what a fest: Justin Vernon's hometown experiment pays off • MUSIC
- 3 Anthony Bourdain's 'Close to the Bone' tour heads to Minneapolis • EAT & DRINK
- 4 Just hanging around: 'Hammocking' becomes a trend in Twin Cities • VARIETY
- 5 Chesney throws down the country gauntlet • MUSIC

TEXT SIZE

0

0

0

EMAIL

PRINT

MORE

When I was there not long ago, the streets were so crowded and the sidewalk cafes so full that I wasted most of my first day standing in line. Then somebody, a guy who zoomed past, slowed down long enough to show me his Omnia & Roma Pass, or ORP, two separate passes sold as a single package, good for three days and priced at 98 euros.

The next day I went to the Omnia office next to St. Peter's and bought the pass. It was just two cards, a guidebook and a map, but they felt like the keys to the kingdom. For the next few days, I whizzed past ticket offices, around long noisy lines and through dedicated turnstiles.

The pass was pricey, but it cost me less than the price of buying the same tickets individually. I didn't have to carry a lot of cash — only enough for lunch — or to take my wallet out to make change. And the two passes, which do different things, complement each other.

Passes let you bypass lines to get in, but you'll still face crowds inside. Throngs in St. Peter's Cathedral push up to the

Loaded with benefits

Here's how it works. The Roma Pass card is the transportation portion, good on all city buses and the subway. You swipe it on the electronic reader in the bus or in the subway station and you're good to go. You can get on and off on a whim, take as many rides as you want, go anywhere within the city and not incur an extra fare. As a bonus, the Roma Pass also includes free entry to two of Rome's most significant monuments, museums and palaces.

But the Roma Pass won't get you into Rome's "Big Three," the Vatican Museum, Sistine Chapel and St. Peter's Basilica. That's the job of the Omnia Pass, which even more importantly, gets you in at a specific time. The ORP office near St. Peter's issues the tickets and makes appointments, an arrangement that saves hours of standing in line. And with a specific tour time, you can plan the rest of your day.

The Omnia Pass also includes entry to the much older and equally historic Basilica of St. John in the Lateran, and to St. Peter's Prison. And it includes free or discounted entries to most of Rome's other major attractions: monuments, museums, Renaissance palaces, archaeological sites and current exhibitions. Additional benefits include a detailed street and tour map and as many sightseeing tours on Omnia's Roma Cristiana double-decker sightseeing bus as you want or your tired feet demand.

Lastly, the ORP's pocket-sized guidebook is an essential part of the package, explaining how to use both passes to best advantage. It also lists Rome's top attractions, describing each one briefly and giving a street address, opening hours, phone number, nearby bus and subway stops and website. The guide is keyed to the map, a quality production that shows city streets, neighborhoods, a subway map, numbered attractions (keyed to a list), and route maps of four neighborhood-themed, self-guided walking tours.

The pass in practice

Since I was hoping to see the Vatican Museum early, I arrived at the ORP office at 8:30 a.m. People were already gathering, but I was up to the counter in 10 minutes, and had the Omnia Pass package in hand in another 5. With a Vatican ticket and an appointment to join the next group out, I was set to roll. Fifteen minutes later, a guide with a flag appeared, waved us over, led us across the plaza, and around the corner to the museum. Forty minutes total — count them — and we were inside.

We still had to get in a line behind two earlier groups; tours get preferential treatment, so you'll never avoid some lines. And by the time I arrived, the galleries were already crowded. The rule here — and at most of Rome's other museums — seems to be that once your group is through the door, you're on your own. You can go at your own pace, hurry through some galleries, linger in others or stay all day.

But that meant that the most popular galleries, the so-called Raphael rooms, for example, which were once the private apartments of Pope Julius II, were also the busiest. By the time I got there the place was so jammed that I couldn't see Raphael's frescoes without wriggling and wangling.

Some visitors who'd come specifically to see the famous "School of Athens" fresco, never really did see the entire wall, or the painter's self-portrait in the lower right corner (he's the young man wearing the black cap). And the Sistine Chapel, said to hold a maximum of 2,000 people, was equally crowded. We were like fish in a net, slowly sliding forward and trying to look at the ceiling.

(A tip: A kindly guard, instead of directing me toward the left side exit where a long line wound out, around and all the way back to St. Peter's Basilica, waved me toward a closed, unmarked door on the far right side, installed, apparently, for wheelchairs. From there it was 10 steps past the elevator and 20 more down into St. Peter's.)

With the afternoon free, I bought an ice cream cone and strolled around Bernini's Four Rivers Fountain, toured the Pantheon (where a guard warned everyone to watch for pickpockets), and spent a peaceful hour sitting on the Spanish Steps.

And since it was Rome, and when in Rome you do what the Romans do so well, I quit early enough to sit at a sidewalk cafe with a glass of red wine and a plate of pasta and watch the world go by.

VIEW COMMENTS

SPONSORED LINKS

from around the web

How I Finally Understood My 401(k) - in 10 minutes (MINT.COM)

Golfers: Why Your Hips Are Responsible for Your Inconsistent Swing (Watch) (SQUARE TO SQUARE METHOD)

Should Your Child Be Responsible for Student Loans? (CITIZENS BANK)

[?]

more from star tribune

Sanders' supporters in Minnesota hope he carries torch of Paul Wellstone

Student's death raises questions about campus drug informants

Sloppy play, feeble offense doom Twins in Oakland