

TRAVEL

CLASSIFIEDS

Real estate, autos, obituaries >D8

Editor: Paul Smith > Telephone: 250-380-5240 > Email: features@timescolonist.com

■ COMICS, D2 ■ RICK STEVES, D4 ■ WEATHER, D12

Hike through the grounds at Nayara Springs Resort and get lost in the landscaping, with tropical plants and flowers crowding every path, enhancing every pool and flanking every restaurant. PHOTOS BY STEVE HAGGERTY, TRIBUNE NEWS SERVICE

COSTA RICA

Peace in the wilds

Tropical paradise lets you get close to nature in a nation that promises security

ANNE Z. COOKE
Tribune News Service

TURRIALBA, Costa Rica

It was 6:01 a.m. when we heard them barking, an insistent “huh-huh-huh-huh” floating through the rain forest canopy and over Pacuare Lodge.

“Howler monkeys,” said Steve, squinting at his watch. Then a toucan weighed in, two long, raspy “screeches” close to our deck, in the Rio Pacuare Forest Reserve, in eastern Costa Rica’s Barbilla National Park.

Up in a flash, we grabbed the binoculars and dashed outside, where a chorus of honks, chirps and whistles ushered in the dawn.

“Shhhh!” Steve said, hopefully, peering over the railing into the underbrush. “Listen! Was that a growl?”

Wildlife on parade is a predictable event at most Costa Rican eco-lodges.

Coatis, capuchin monkeys, birds and butterflies lead off, followed by sloths, bacillus lizards (Jesus lizards because they “walk” on water) and green frogs, with howler monkeys, tapirs, armadillos and tarantulas at the rear. But big cats, ocelots and pumas? Once in a green moon.

“Jaguars? Maybe, but don’t count on it,” said travel planner Alison Carey, three months earlier when she called to talk about our trip.

> See TOURS, page D3

River runners rafting to Pacuare Lodge encounter easy Class 2 rapids. On the return journey, they can expect heart-pounding class 4 and 5 rapids downstream.

Howler monkeys are hard to see but easy to identify; listen for their loud throaty howls.

Keel-billed toucans, bright-coloured and slow-flying, are easy to spot in dense rainforests such as those in the Pacuare River gorge.

TRAVEL NOTES

Travel series on PBS aims for accessibility

NEW YORK — You may know Samantha Brown from her years as a Travel Channel host for shows such as Passport series about Latin America, China and Europe.

She’s back with a new series on PBS called Places to Love, launching Saturday with 13 episodes weekly through March.

Places to Love visits destinations ranging from Shanghai to Huntsville, Alabama, with an emphasis on experiences that anyone can go out and do.

In an interview for the latest episode of the weekly AP Travel podcast Get Outta Here, Brown said none of her experiences were exclusive or created just for the camera. She said everything she does, viewers can do. — The Associated Press

Washington’s estate gets a new film

MOUNT VERNON, Virginia — Visitors to George Washington’s Mount Vernon estate will see a new 4-D film depicting the U.S. president’s role in the American Revolution.

The estate has reopened its Revolutionary War Theater after a $2-million renovation.

A new 17-minute film accompanies the renovation, replacing the film that had been shown since the theatre first opened in 2006.

Mount Vernon says the 105-seat theatre, which features 4-D effects such as falling snow and wafting fog, is one of its most popular attractions.

More than 100 re-enactors participated in production of the new film at locations throughout Virginia.

— The Associated Press

HOT SPOTS

Acapulco	28
Bangkok	31
Honolulu	26
Hilo	25
Cancun	24
Havana	23
Puerto Vallarta	28
Phoenix	23
Tahiti	29

Arenal Volcano's unexpected 2010 eruption reminded observers that Central Costa Rica's most famous feature can be unpredictable.

FROM PAGE D1

Tours can be customized to fulfil desires to explore

A Latin America specialist with Scott Dunn Personal Journeys, Carey and her colleagues research and book custom, personalized adventures for individual travellers.

We'd been to Costa Rica before, but just briefly, on a cruise ship stopover. This time would be different, we agreed. Hence the call to Scott Dunn Personal Journeys, a leader in the growing trend toward custom travel.

"You'll like Pacuare Lodge," said Carey. "It's on the river, an easy, four-mile raft ride downstream. It's known for wildlife, and wild cats, too, though they're rarely seen. It's isolated, but that's part of the appeal. You know what they say: Costa Rica is one of Central America's safest countries."

Was it? Sporadic upheavals have plagued Central America for decades, from corrupt governments and armed insurrections to civil wars and more recently, drug trafficking. What makes Costa Rica different?

Then our itinerary arrived in the mail, a spiral-bound notebook listing dates, places and our contacts at each, with blank space for notes. The last three nights would be on our own, joining well-heeled friends for a reunion at Villa Manzu, a palatial mansion on the Papagayo Peninsula.

But the question lingered.

"Is it true? Is Costa Rica Central America's safest country?" I asked Abel, the Scott Dunn driver who picked us up at the Juan Santamaria International Airport, in San Jose, the capital.

"We think so," he said, heading for the Finca Rosa Blanca hotel, north of the city. "It's because we have no military," he continued. "The money pays instead for schools, high school and college, and for health care and doctors. And it's all free," he said.

"Of course, there are always people who don't want to work and are tempted to steal. But most people here have jobs," he added as we reached the hotel, a restored, 14-suite Spanish Colonial house and coffee plantation, with a pool and a popular open-air restaurant.

On time for the day's coffee plantation tour, we thought we'd learn about coffee. But the two-hour uphill walk with naturalist Manolo Munoz was as much about sustainable farming as it was about a good cup of joe.

Guiding us among the coffee trees, planted in volcanic soil between banana and poro trees in a mixed-species forest, Munoz explained that trees add important minerals to the soil. "A mix of sun and shade grows better 'cherries' [coffee beans] than the big commercial farms do," he said.

That evening, as the sun slipped between the palm fronds and Miguel, the hotel waiter, came around with menus, I decided to see what he'd say. "Uh, Miguel, why do people say Costa Rica is Central America's safest country?"

"Because we don't have an army," he said. "After the civil war, in 1949, the government decided that paying for education, hospitals, culture and parks was more important than guns and soldiers."

Local police handle regional crime and a national government-supported 70-member team of "commandos," a trained "security and intervention" group, is available for extreme emergencies. But beyond that, no army.

In Costa Rica, we learned, education, health and the environment are more than a campaign promise. They are the framework for a peaceful future.

No wildlife conversation lasted more than 10 minutes before the Pacuare Lodge, a National Geographic-designated Unique Lodge of the World, has more than 18 guest cottages.

Staying in the Linda Vista Suites, high up in the rainforest canopy and with screened walls on three sides, feels like being outdoors.

topic turned to Costa Rica's many species, and how they have adapted to the country's 12 climate zones, each at a different altitude, from sea level to the summit of frosty, 3,820-metre Cerro Chirripo Volcano.

Rafting through the Pacuare River's narrow gorge, to Pacuare Lodge on the river bank, we could see the difference between the trees along the river gorge and those on the mountainside above, where the howler monkeys live.

Alone in the forest, Pacuare Lodge is self-sustaining (electricity is limited to several hours daily), rustic and luxurious. Candles light the upstairs bar and hall, and the dining room downstairs and adjoining deck, where all meals are served. Most of the bungalows have some screened walls, bringing the outside in. The first group were built along the river; the luxury suites climb the hill, each a five-star treehouse.

Our days were busy with discovery hikes, wildlife prowls and trips to the nearby Indigenous village, with an occasional plunge pool dip and nap in our hammock. Leisurely dinners with like-minded guests made the rainforest silence that much more serene.

A startling contrast, indeed, to our next destination, Nayara Springs Resort, on a highway near Arenal Volcano National Park, in central Costa Rica. Greeted by a uniformed bellboy, we thought we'd made a wrong turn.

But this popular vacation village and honeymoon retreat only masquerades as a hotel. In fact, it offers urban sophistication in a rainforest setting. With its sumptuous suites — and swimming pools, spa and gym, restaurants and shops — connected by a maze of heavily landscaped serpentine paths, each is hidden from the next. A five minute walk beneath the trees — with resident birds and 30-odd sloths overhead — was a stroll in the woods.

Manolo Munoz, coffee plantation guide at the Finca Rosa Blanca inn, 20 minutes north of San Jose, explains the coffee-bean sorter during a plantation tour.

As our Scott Dunn-planned trip ended, we said goodbye to our driver, Andreas, who delivered us to Villa Manzu. And there was the mansion, overlooking the ocean, a modern, sandy-coloured stone building flanked by grassy lawns and trees, pools and patios.

Art and artifacts lined the corridors and walls. The kitchen-plus-bar stools adjoined the living and dining rooms; the theatre, two bars, party room and eight luxurious bedrooms with bath completed the luxury. A path to the cliff-side barbecue. A path to the cliff-side barbed wire faced the sunset.

With a staff of 12, including butler and three chefs, this luxurious hideaway, on five acres, guarantees privacy for those who can

Like much in Costa Rica's rainforest, the Pacuare Lodge's Canopy Adventures zipline orientation starts up in a tree.

A half-hour hike from Pacuare Lodge leads to a hidden waterfall.

THE NITTY GRITTY

If you go: Scott Dunn Personal Journeys, a leader in the newest trend in travel, researches, plans and books personalized vacations and adventures. scottdunn.com.

All lodging prices may vary with discounts, dates and availability.

The lodges:

At Finca Rosa Blanca, double rooms start at $254 US per night; fincarosablanca.com/en

At Pacuare Lodge, rates for two in a bungalow with meals, most recreation and non-alcoholic beverages start at $766; three nights are recommended. pacuarelodge.com

At Nayara Springs and Nayara Resort, bungalows for two start at $351, but vary with discounts and availability. nayarasprings.com

At Villa Manzu, the all-inclusive rate for the house is priced per night. Multiple guests, groups and families can share the afford it: celebrities, tech-company millionaires, movie moguls, industry titans and sports greats. For us, being there was dumb luck.

"Make yourself at home," said our hostess, with a warm hug, inviting us to take in the scenery or use the heated pool.

"Meet our butler, Luis Morera, who makes the most marvelous cocktails," she added.

Other options included "talking ingredients," with the chefs, or asking about wine-pairings. We could borrow a kayak or fishing gear and walk down to the beach, take a car to visit the Beach Club cost. Call for dates, availability and current prices. villamanzu.com.

Going there: Fly into Juan Santamaria International Airport, in San Jose. For Villa Manzu, in Guanacaste Province, fly into Liberia Airport.

or play golf. "Villa Manzu has guest privileges." Arrive by yacht and tie up in the harbor. Or fly: "The driver will meet you at the airport."

The Villa sleeps 20-plus adults and/or children. Because this is your house, everything's included: Meals, wine, cocktails, snacks, sports equipment, fishing gear, a car, guides, and as always, Costa Rican hospitality.

Anne Z. Cooke writes about travel and its effect on global warming. Contact her at travelswithanne@cs.com; or Twitter at @anneontheroad.