

LIONS ESCAPE

Penn State holds off Pittsburgh | B1

A DAY WITH ANIMALS

Annual animal hospital event celebrates bond with pets | A3

COUPONS WORTH $67 inside today

SUNDAY REPUBLICAN HERALD

SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 15, 2019

www.republicanherald.com

7-day home delivery $5.30 / $2.50

9/15/2019

The Republican Herald

C2 POTTSVILLE (PA), REPUBLICAN HERALD

TRAVEL

SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 15, 2019

STEVE HAGGERTY / TRIBUNE NEWS SERVICE

STEVE HAGGERTY / TRIBUNE NEWS SERVICE

STEVE HAGGERTY / TRIBUNE NEWS SERVICE

Billingmwe manager Alex Steward has a surprise for her guests: the evening sundowner in the Luangwa River, barefoot, with the Chinden Hills in the background.

Size matters when two forces meet. Flapping ears tells us to back off and give him space at the South Luangwa National Park, Bushcamp Company, Mfuwe, Zambia.

Billingmwe Lodge, more rustic comfort homemade in Africa, is crafted out of logs, planks, reeds and thatch.

Wide-eyed in Zambia

Discover Africa's last great place

BY ANNE Z. COOKE

TRIBUNE NEWS SERVICE

MFUWE, Zambia — Alox Stewart, waiting on the steps of Billingmwe Lodge, deep in the Zambian bush, likes nothing better than surprising first-time visitors to this wilderness outpost with an introduction to the next-door neighbors.

"Come in, come in, you're just in time," she urges, a twinkle in her eye, leading me to the rear deck of the lodge, one of six Bushcamp Company lodges in the South Luangwa National Park. When she points to the backyard waterhole, I get it.

There they are, two female elephants and a baby splashing each other, cooling off on this hot October day. "Junior is a year old now," said Stewart, beaming as the little guy rolls over and over in a bathtub-shaped hole, smacking the water with his trunk and feet, the very image of a 1-year-old let loose in a wading pool.

"And that's Harry," added Stewart, as a hefty hippopotamus rises up in the water, blinks at the commotion and sinks back down. "He walks over from the Luangwa River to get away from the other males," she said, tossing back her hair, a thick white mane. "He likes it here, where he's top dog."

After 26 hours and three flights from California to Zambia, in the southern Africa, with a three-hour drive from Bushcamp's Mfuwe Lodge to Billingmwe, I was dragging. But not for long.

I'd forgotten how it feels on your first day in the bush. Eclatant and wide-eyed. Over the moon. And then, sobbing up, eager but cautious. A safari lodge is a thousand times better than any zoo, but you — not the animals — are the lions in the cage.

"You need to be aware, to look around, and especially never go out at night without an escort," said Bushcamp manager Amy Alderman. The safe way to watch lions is from an off-road vehicle, which the big cats ignore.

When your tracker climbs up on the fender and your guide shifts gears, the adventure begins, a search for the legendary "Big Five" (lions, leopards, elephants, hippos and buffalo), and the "Lesser Five": hyenas, rhinos, impalas, bushbucks, giraffe, wildbeest, rhinos, wild dogs, crocodiles, civets and genets.

Why this trip, our fourth to the region? Steve, my husband, showed me a South African Airways ticket sale online, and I said it was too good to pass up. And we had a plan. Fly from Washington, D.C., to Johannesburg, then north to Lusaka and Mfuwe, transfer to Mfuwe Lodge, then to Billingmwe and later to Chamilanda. Next, fly south to Livingston for a couple of days at the Islands of Siankaba, the riverside resort in the Zambezi River.

Finally, a flight to Skukuza, in South Africa, for a visit to Earth Lodge and Bush Lodge, in the 190,000-acre Sabi Sabi Private Game Reserve, on the border of Kruger National Park. Sixteen days, five game-lodge destinations and none of them alike.

I picked Billingmwe and Chamilanda for the location, in the wilderness and off the grid. With rustic cabins, six to eight guests, friendly staff, first-class guides and a dedication to wildlife preservation, they sounded perfect.

STEVE HAGGERTY / TRIBUNE NEWS SERVICE

Export trackers Lazarus and Louis find gold: a pride of lions sleeping off dinner.

Built of logs, planks, reeds and thatching, the cabins were a work of art. And with striped pillows, African colors, flush toilet, running water, screens and a single solar-powered nightlight, I felt right at home. But the lodges weren't ideal.

Billingmwe looked over a waterhole, Chamilanda had a river view, and a "hide" above an elephant path. Chamilanda's dinners were served by the river; at Billingmwe we ate on the deck by candlelight, sharing wine and hashing over the day's surprises.

The lions that killed and ate the buffalo, the bush babies in the Malagasy tree and the discovery — to our mutual astonishment — that our fellow guests, a couple from England, live next door to my English cousins.

Manda Chisemba, our guide, the award-winning naturalist and a keen-eyed tracker, was both tireless and professional. "Did you hear that?" he asked. "It's an Eagle Owl. He's on that tree branch, there, no, to the left. And over there, the grass is moving but there's no wind tonight. Do you see the leopard?"

Who bonded when I told him I drive a 48-year-old car with a dent on the fender, and disbelieving, he cracked a smile, then broke-down laughing. "No, you don't really do you? That's too funny," he said, shaking his head, chortling just as we spotted a pair of hyenas.

Steve picked the next destination, the Islands of Siankaba, on an island in the mighty Zambezi, where the river is wide and shallow. Spectacular views from the lodge take it all in, from the trees in the foreground to Zimbabwe, on the river's far side.

The patio, with tables and chairs, flower beds and a fountain, was the gathering place. Our bedroom, one of seven tented cabins connected by sewing machines, hung to the bank above the high water mark. Sleeping late we relaxed, sat in the pool, took a sunset cruise,

The nitty gritty

Planning. There are no African safaris that you can't afford. Tent camping and 35-person tours, favored by students and young couples, are cheap and fun. High-priced lodges cost more because they offer more, from personal airport transfers to private cabins, comfortable beds, meals, beverages, game drives, off-site tours and even laundry service.

Getting there: For South African Airways' routes, flight times and special offers see www.flysaa.com. Visas to enter Zambia are sold at the Lusaka Airport; the $50 visa is slightly more expensive but provides multiple entries.

Staying: See the Bushcamp Company at www.bushcamp.com; the Sabi Sabi Bush Lodge at www.sabisabi.com; and the Islands of Siankaba at www.siankaba.net. These and similar safari lodge websites provide photos, maps and descriptive lodging, meals, wildlife, game drives and climate. All-inclusive safari lodge rates per person, per night, range from $570 to $1,000 or more.

STEVE HAGGERTY / TRIBUNE NEWS SERVICE

Nosiya Sibiya, a shaman in Hamilton Village, rolls the knucklebones for visitors seeking answers.

both in the Sabi Sabi Private Game Reserve.

Despite a day lost to rain, we didn't miss a drive, bouncing over the hills in comfortable vehicles, with rain gear on board and miles of new territory to explore. When our guide and tracker, Lazarus Mahoro and Louis Mikam, spotted paw prints in the dirt, they drove over every bush until they found the lions, asleep in the grass.

But the lodges themselves couldn't have been more different. Channeling the Neanderthals, Earth Lodge's 13 luxury suites were caves, richly decorated dug-outs in the side of a hill, invisible from the top or afar. We sat in our plunge pool outside the front windows and watched the impala graze in complete privacy.

The lounges, tidy rock gardens, weathered tree trunks, bar, wine cellar and dining room echoed the motif, fresh and inviting but spartan. Even the dinner guests fit the mold, eating at the next table, alone and in silence. In contrast, Bush Camp, with 25 luxury suites, popped with energy. Game drives mattered, but as part of the larger experience. The high school kids in short shorts, celebrating a birthday, said it best: "First person to see a rhino gets the prize."

The food, served buffet style on a half-dozen tables heaped high, ran from meats, fish and pasta to salads, fruit, vegetables, breads and cookies, while the guests, sitting wherever there was space, mingled and exchanged names.

You could leave your kids in the Children's Center, tour Huntington Village or visit two nearby schools, both supported by the game lodges. Or you could meet Village elder Nosiya Sibiya, a Shangan shaman. Invited into her rondavel, I sat down, crossed my legs, she rolled the knucklebones and then she spoke, the words I'd hoped to hear: "We will meet again some time."