

$575.35 IN SAVINGS
That's the value of the coupons you'll find inside today's paper.

PATRIOTS OUSTED
Henry Titans hold off Patriots in the opening round of the AFC playoffs. E1

HUSKIES STRUGGLE
UConn men, in offensive funk, fall to 0-2 in AAC with loss to USF. E1

WINDY, SOME SUN
Windy, some sun;
highs in 30s. A2

Hartford Courant

VOLUME CLXXIV NUMBER 5

COURANT.COM

SUNDAY, JANUARY 5, 2020

F6 SUNDAY, JANUARY 5, 2020 THE HARTFORD COURANT

LIVING

STEVE HAGGERTY/TNS PHOTOS

Jalama Beach County Park has camping sites and encourages beachcombing, surfing, whale watching and fishing. The water can be rough but lifeguards are posted in summer.

Tall tales in Lompoc

History meets the sea in this intriguing California hamlet

BY ANNE Z. COOKE
Tribune News Service

LOMPOC, Calif. — I thought I'd seen everything. Then I discovered a remarkable collection of the world's oldest pictorial art hiding out in Lompoc, a modest hamlet perched on the wave-dashed coast of California, north of Santa Barbara.

Murals are what I mean. 36 huge paintings on the walls in the Old Town district, an art whose origins reach back 35,000 years — or more — to figures drawn on cave walls in Europe and elsewhere.

The who and why of cave art remains a mystery. But not in Lompoc, where the now-famous mural project was launched with a purpose, to revitalize the historic center and attract more tourists.

According to Vicki Anderson, administrator of the Lompoc Mural Society and a painter in her own right, Lompoc needed a boost after 1989, when Vandenberg Air Force Base, the community's biggest employer and customer, shut down the shuttle launch program.

Murals were suggested. But the residents wanted more than a disjointed array of big pictures. Instead, they chose a single theme: the story of Lompoc, from its earliest inhabitants — the Chumash Indians — to the present.

Newsayers wondered if a town of 43,400 people, straddling a rocky shore on a lonely corner of the coastline, had much to tell. But Lompoc surprised them. Taken together — think of them as a contemporary "book of hours" — the murals are as fascinating as any medieval manuscript.

But I'm getting ahead of myself. "I was born on a farm right out there, next to that hill, so I know most of the folks here," he said. "Ask all the questions you want. And if there's something I can't answer, I know who to call." Lompoc is home, so showing it off keeps me up to date.

He pointed east, toward the valley. "It's wonderful, but it's hard work, preparing the site, carrying ladders and scaffolds, cleaning and restoring old murals, helping the painters and raising money," she said. "It's expensive and with everyone so busy nowadays, volunteers are hard to find."

Ending the day at Sissy's Uptown Cafe, (don't miss this place, the town's top-rated restaurant), notable for Painter John Pugh's crumpe Puff ship, which seems to be crashing through the wall, we talked about other tourist attractions.

I'd noticed that Lompoc has two golf courses. The biggest draw, said Ostini, are the vineyards, which offer wine tours and tasting rooms. Known for outstanding pinot and chardonnays, the Rita Hill vineyards have earned their own AVA wine appellation.

The next most popular is the partially restored and wonderfully ancient La Purisima Mission, which I visited the next morning, joining a tour with guide Parker Grand, through the workshops and the garden. Since the 2,000-acre state historic park next door has 25 miles of hiking trails, the place is always busy.

I loved the back-to-grandma memories on the Fabing-McKay-Spanne house tour, a restored Victorian property and blacksmith shop, but missed the Lompoc Museum, now located in the former Carnegie Library, a 1910 colonial revival gem.

Next time, I hope. Though the ocean is right there, submerged rocks and fierce currents make swimming dangerous. Ocean Beach adjoins the shallow, meandering Santa Inez River estuary, and Surf Beach is one of the nation's most dangerous shark sites. Read the warning signs. Go there to get your feet wet, make sand castles and walk along the shore.

To swim, try Jalama Beach County Park, a sandy beach 19 miles from Lompoc, off Route 1. I checked out the campsites and noticed people surfing, sunning and beachcombing. The water can be rough but lifeguards are posted in summer.

If I'd planned ahead I could have toured Vandenberg, on 100,000 rough and rugged coastal acres. The West Coast's answer to Cape Canaveral, Vandenberg is the launch pad for Space X's Falcon 9 and several other commercial rockets. Hot stuff for space wonks, they arrive hours early and line up for a parking space in the "Hawk's Nest," a public parking-and-viewing area with bathrooms. Five miles directly across from the launch site.

"You wouldn't think five miles is close enough, but these rockets are so huge and loud that the ground rumbles for miles around," said Ostini. "Some people here watch them from town. It's a good way to end a weekend, I promise."

State Route 1 was the first surprise; no urban sprawl, the bane of Southern California. The highway, crossing the valley, wound between open meadows, flowering hedges, stands of white oaks, white farmhouse, neatly hood vegetable plots, vineyards planted in geometric rows, and all of it framed by the gold-and-green Santa Rita Hills.

Twenty-odd miles later, approaching the town, a rainbow appeared overhead. Glittering through a misty veil, it shed a glow on the empty lots and dinky repair shops that clutter the outskirts of almost every small town.

And there was Ostini, in the Hilton Garden Inn's parking lot, proposing that we start at the South Side Coffee Co., a funky Old Town hangout at the corner of Ocean Avenue and South H Street. Finding a booth, we sat over a latte and studied the mural map, then walked south to the center of Old Town.

Since wall space becomes available at different times, the murals aren't painted in sequence. The "Flower Industry," for instance, by artist Art Mondmer, celebrating the 1960s and '70s, when Lompoc's flower seed business was the nation's largest, is on one corner, while the mural "Chumash Indians," where the history actually starts, is on another.

The La Purisima Mission ("Purisima" is one of several Chumash languages) is depicted twice, and the name of the town, founded in 1884, as a temperance community, also remembers its origins: "Lom-poc" is a Chumash word for "lagoon," or "still water."

Eliseo Art Silva's "The Price of Freedom" pays tribute to the men and women who served, fought and died during the 20th century's armed conflicts. The mural, created in 2000, is one of many in Lompoc, California.

Lompoc is known for its art and a culture that supports creative design in every form, from murals to crosswalks.

Need advice on what to see? Ask the friendly staff at South Side Coffee Co., in Old Town, serving breakfast, lunch and, of course, coffee.

Need advice on what to see? Ask the friendly staff at South Side Coffee Co., in Old Town, serving breakfast, lunch and, of course, coffee.

Need advice on what to see? Ask the friendly staff at South Side Coffee Co., in Old Town, serving breakfast, lunch and, of course, coffee.

"When a new mural is planned, we request bids and choose a painter through a jurying process."

— Vicki Anderson, administrator of the Lompoc Mural Society

morning, joining a tour with guide Parker Grand, through the workshops and the garden. Since the 2,000-acre state historic park next door has 25 miles of hiking trails, the place is always busy.

I loved the back-to-grandma memories on the Fabing-McKay-Spanne house tour, a restored Victorian property and blacksmith shop, but missed the Lompoc Museum, now located in the former Carnegie Library, a 1910 colonial revival gem.

Next time, I hope. Though the ocean is right there, submerged rocks and fierce currents make swimming dangerous. Ocean Beach adjoins the shallow, meandering Santa Inez River estuary, and Surf Beach is one of the nation's most dangerous shark sites. Read the warning signs. Go there to get your feet wet, make sand castles and walk along the shore.

To swim, try Jalama Beach County Park, a sandy beach 19 miles from Lompoc, off Route 1. I checked out the campsites and noticed people surfing, sunning and beachcombing. The water can be rough but lifeguards are posted in summer.

If I'd planned ahead I could have toured Vandenberg, on 100,000 rough and rugged coastal acres. The West Coast's answer to Cape Canaveral, Vandenberg is the launch pad for Space X's Falcon 9 and several other commercial rockets. Hot stuff for space wonks, they arrive hours early and line up for a parking space in the "Hawk's Nest," a public parking-and-viewing area with bathrooms. Five miles directly across from the launch site.

"You wouldn't think five miles is close enough, but these rockets are so huge and loud that the ground rumbles for miles around," said Ostini. "Some people here watch them from town. It's a good way to end a weekend, I promise."

Need advice on what to see? Ask the friendly staff at South Side Coffee Co., in Old Town, serving breakfast, lunch and, of course, coffee.

Need advice on what to see? Ask the friendly staff at South Side Coffee Co., in Old Town, serving breakfast, lunch and, of course, coffee.

Need advice on what to see? Ask the friendly staff at South Side Coffee Co., in Old Town, serving breakfast, lunch and, of course, coffee.