

TOUR OUR 7 MODEL HOMES

SAT, DEC 14, 2013 | -6 °C Light snow

Full Text Archive

SPEC AUCTIONS GOLDEN HORSESHOE ATHLETE OF THE NOMINATIONS READERS' CHOICE YOUR STORIES SEARCH AND SUBMIT EVENTS

CANCER: A CODE RED PROJECT CENTURY OF STEEL LIFE AND DEATH HOT TOPICS COLUMNISTS WIN TORONTO MAPLE LEAF TICKETS!

SIGNUP | LOGIN

CLASSIFIEDS REAL ESTATE The Salvation Army needs your help filling Christmas Food & Gift Baskets for families. Our Wish List includes our most needed items this season. CLICK HERE for complete list Warm Winter Wear Infants & Toddlers

Teen Girls Teen Boys Groceries

The Salvation Army Community and Family Services

Have yourself an old-fashioned Christmas at Germany's markets

By Anne Z. Cooke and Steve Haggerty

DRESDEN, Germany "So, you want to celebrate the holidays in style," said my seat partner, Max, a businessman flying to Berlin. He gave me a knowing look. "And you're going for the first time? Don't miss Nuremburg. That's where you'll taste the very best lebkuchen. It's a spiced gingerbread. We try to go every year."

His advice wasn't the first to come my way. I'd been urged to go to Leipzig where choir concerts in the St. Thomas church mark the season. Or to Cologne, famous for spekulatius, a cinnamonspiced biscuit; or to Erzgebirge for a nussknacker, a carved wood nutcracker. If I wanted to buy one of the candle-powered twirly-whirly "pyramids" typical of Saxony, I'd been assured that tabletop versions were sold everywhere.

Would three markets in eight days be too hectic? Not if I abandoned the idea of renting a car and decided to ride the rails. With a German rail pass good for the week, I saved myself the trouble of driving and parking. And I booked hotel rooms in Dresden, Berlin and Weimar, all fairly near each other and with conveniently located in-town train stations.

By early December, a good two weeks before Saint Nick and the reindeer were due on my rooftop in California, I was already among the revelers in Dresden, primed for decorated trees, shimmery glass stars and roasted chestnuts

When it comes to celebrating Christmas the old-fashioned way, nobody does it like Germany. For 11 months of the year, summer holidays and the health of the European Union occupy most conversations. But as December approaches, tradition takes precedence, a fond reminder of simpler days.

When twilight settles over these ancient towns — and it comes early in the northern latitudes — 10,000 tiny lights twinkle on and holiday revelers, swaddled in thick coats, gather to stroll, gawk, finish their gift shopping and meet friends for an evening's merriment.

Not knowing quite what to expect, I started in Dresden, a good place for an initiation into Saxon-style cheer. Here were crafts, wood carvings, ornaments, baked goods and cheeses of every size and kind, with smiling vendors bundled in winter coats offering bite-size tastes. Sausage vendors standing at sizzling grills offered grilled bratwurst in a bun, the traditional match for mulled wine (gluhwein).

Wandering over to the Frauenkirche church, now famously rebuilt, I poked my head in the door and was lucky enough to get a ticket for that evening's Christmas concert. Here, too, was my chance to visit one of Germany's oldest Christmas markets, the Striezelmarkt, now celebrating its 579-year anniversary.

In Weimar, where the market was busy by mid-morning despite falling snow and drifts piling up on the town's miniature Market Square, the smell of bratwurst and sounds of Christmas carols filled the air. Instead of deterring residents, the weather brought them out, with parents pushing babies in strollers and pulling older kids on sleds.

In Berlin, where the blaze of lights from the bustling Alexanderplatz Market were visible from my hotel window, the impulse to walk over after dinner, even after a day of sightseeing, was impossible to resist. As the biggest and busiest of Berlin's holiday markets — the street car runs through the middle — it was an ideal place for a gluhwein (hot mulled wine) nightcap.

In recent years, Christmas markets have popped up all over Germany, a trend resulting from population growth and a booming economy. A tradition that originated in medieval market towns (before the advent of refrigeration and the supermarket), they're now the core of the annual holiday celebration.

What do most of these jolly affairs look like? They resemble the sort of farmers' market you shop at on Saturday: rows of stalls, tents or traditional wood huts, usually — but not always — set up outside on the town's largest historic town square. Clustered among Gothic churches and Renaissance halls, they make you feel that old St. Nick might just be around the corner. In the daylight before visitors begin to arrive — midafternoon, say — you'll think it looks more like the state fair. But switch on those millions of twinkling lights and set the six-metre-tall "pyramids" a-twirling, and magic happens.

In Dresden, the stalls are set up in front of the restored Frauenkirche church with the overflow creeping down adjacent cobblestone streets. The Striezelmarkt is in an empty lot. In Weimar, they're lined up on the market square under the gaze of the City Hall clock tower. In Berlin we visited three markets, though I was told as many as 70 exist, one for each neighbourhood

We spent most of our time at the Alexanderplatz market because we could see the lights and hear the music from our hotel window. Hotels fill up quickly, with visitors and tour groups coming from all over Europe for a long festive weekend with plenty of shopping, sightseeing and eating marking the occasion.

In recent years, some Christmas markets have extended the season, starting early and ending later, from late November to New Year's. Profit is the motivation, of course. I even spotted some sellers offering T-shirts, jeans, wallets and backpacks, and in one market a Mickey Mouse-themed kids' ride. Horrors! But the butchers, the bakers and the toy makers are still front and centre, tempting you with their wares and ensuring that in Germany, at least, Christmas isn't about to change.

McClatchy-Tribune News Service

(0) COMMENTS

JOIN THE CONVERSATION

SIGN UP

LOGIN

thespec.com

THE SPEC INFO

ABOUT US ADVERTISE WITH US BECOME A CARRIER CONTACT US CORPORATE SALES EYE ON THE AREA PHOTO SUBMISSIONS FAQ MANAGE MY SUBSCRIPTION MOBILE NEWSLETTER SIGNUP PRINT EDITIONS SPECSTORE.CA SITEMAP TERMS OF USE TODAY'S PAPER

LOCAL INFO

ANNOUNCEMENTS
CARS
CLASSIFIEDS
JOBS
REAL ESTATE
RENTALS
SHOPPING
USED CARS

COMMUNITY SITES

BRANTNEWS.COM
CAMBRIDGETIMES.CA
FLAMBOROUGHREVIEW.COM
HAMILTONNEWS.COM
INSIDEHALTON.COM
MISSISSAUGA.COM
NIAGARATHISWEEK.COM
SACHEM.CA

RESOURCES

GOLDBOOK.CA INSURANCEHOTLINE.COM LEASEBUSTERS.COM METROLANDSTORE.COM SAVE.CA TORONTO.COM WAGJAG.COM WORKOPOLIS

DAILY NEWSPAPERS

GUELPH MERCURY
TORONTO STAR
WATERLOO REGION RECORD
SETTLEMENT OF CANADIAN
COPYRIGHT CLASS ACTION

METROLAND NEWS LADVERTISING TERMS L CORPORATE PRIVACY POLICY

© COPYRIGHT METROLAND 2013 ALL RIGHTS RESERVED